

Strengthening civil society in developing countries through targeted aid

Professor Jude Howell helped the Australian Government refine

- the significance of local context, including the history of state-civil relations and competing visions of civil society
- the significance of the 'War on Terror' in decisions about development aid and the danger that civil society organisations are drawn into security agendas in 2012, recognised the importance of an 'informed and engaged' civil society.

LSE gratefully acknowledges the following for support of this research:

Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) Ford Foundation Higher Education Funding Council